

Brodie, John Clark

(1865-1928)

Photo thanks to DNW

Biographical and Other Notes

He worked as a lithographic artist and master engraver for W. & A.K. Johnston. The company he joined was founded by Sir William Johnston (1802-88), a steel and copperplate engraver who learnt his trade with James Kirkwood and then William Home Lizars (1788-1859), the second-generation engraver who took over the Lizars family business at 3 St James square, Edinburgh, in 1872. On the death of Lizars Johnston's acquired the business, along with its important banknote printing operations, when Brodie joined the company. Lost a leg in an accident, but continued to work well into the 20th C.

Collection of proof and specimen notes sold in 76 lots at DNW 12 March 2008.

Contributors to British Numismatics

Sources and References

https://www.dnw.co.uk/auction-archive/special-collections/foreword.php?specialcollection_id=144

24 July 2021

