LINCOLN, although a city and county of itself, is the capital of the shire to which it gives its name. By the Romans it was called Lindum and it had the status of a colonia. From these component parts the present name is derived. Later it was the chief city of the Lindiswaras, an Anglian tribe whose territory was called Lindsey. These settlers were in turn supplanted by Danes, and Lincoln became a state of Danish Mercia under a jarl of its own, and one of the loose confederation of states known as the Five Burghs. We are unaware of any Roman coins that have been attributed to Lindum, but its position as a Roman colonia would lead us to suppose that some may have been struck there, and we offer the suggestion that these may be found amongst those now attributed to Lugdunum, the modern French city of Lyon. Under Ælfred the Great coins were struck bearing the name of Lincoln, whilst others of the same place and of about the same time appear to be copied from Ælfred’s coins but issued under other authority. It is probable that coinage took place at Lincoln under Eadweard the Elder, but the name of this mint does not occur upon any one of the few coins of that king which bear a mint name. Some coins of Æthelstan are attributed to it, but the readings of these are not entirely satisfactory. With regard to the coins of Eadmund, Eadred and Eadwig there is the same difficulty as in the case of Eadweard’s, namely, that only very few of them disclose the name of their place of mintage, and Lincoln is not so favoured. During the reigns of Eadgar to Harold II., both inclusive, coins were struck at and bear the name of Lincoln, and these are in abundant evidence in our cabinets of to-day.

From Domesday we learn that 166 houses were destroyed to make room for the castle. This was erected by William I., at some time after May 11th, in the year 1067, as the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle after recording the hallowing of his Queen, Matilda, at Westminster on that day, Whitsunday, proceeds to narrate that it was then announced to the king that the people in the north had gathered themselves together, and would stand against him if he came. William then went to Nottingham, and there wrought a castle; and so went to York, and there wrought two castles, and in Lincoln, “and everywhere in that part.” Domesday also records that in the time of King Edward the city of Lincoln used to render twenty pounds to the king and ten pounds to the earl. Then it rendered one hundred pounds, by tale, between the king and the earl. The mint then rendered seventy-five pounds. This large payment was apparently made entirely to the king as the contrary is not specified, so that we may infer that the mint at Lincoln was a royal mint of great importance and that it was farmed to the burgesses. It will be seen from the appended list that coins of all of the types of William I. and II. emanating from this mint are preserved to us, with the exception of Type VII of the first-named king.

General Note as to the Order of the Types of the Coinage of William II.

There has been acquired by the British Museum a coin of the Thetford mint of the type Hawkins 247 which appears to have been overstruck on a coin of the type of Hawkins 250. This being so it is evident that Hawkins 250 should precede Hawkins 247, and that our type 4 should be corrected to type 3, and that type 3 should be altered to type 4.

In order to interfere as little as may be with the scheme of this work as already printed it is proposed in this, and in the future portions of the remainder, to adhere to the original arrangement, but to add within brackets in italics the corrected references to the order of the types:—Thus,
THE LINCOLN MINT.

Our thanks are accorded to Mr. George C. Brooke for having brought to our notice the important item of new evidence disclosed to us by the overstruck coin referred to. This rearrangement is supported by a Canterbury coin, since inspected in the collection of Mr. L. E. Bruun, having for obverse Hawkins 247, and for reverse Hawkins 248.

VOL. VIII.
Stamford is an ancient royal borough situate chiefly in Lincolnshire, but partly in Northamptonshire. The river Welland is the division between these shires, and the stan-ford, = stone-ford, across this, on the line of the Great North Road, gave the town its name. There are many other places in England also called Stamford or Stanford for the like reason, and the majority of these have preserved the uncorrupted form of the name. Henry of Huntingdon records that a battle took place at Stamford, forty miles from Lincoln, in the middle of the fifth century, between the Britons and their then allies, the Saxons, against the Scots and Picts. In this fight the latter were defeated, but the Britons soon found to their cost that the importation of mercenary troops was an unwise experiment, a remedy worse than the disease.

Of the grants to the monastery of Medehamstede by Wulfhere, King of the Mercians, A.D. 664, by Eadgar and other potentates we will defer writing until we reach our account of Peterborough. It now suffices to note that Stamford has mention in these. This town also was one of the Five Burghs, or Boroughs, to which reference has already been made in our accounts of Derby, Leicester and Lincoln.

It is not unlikely that coins were struck at Stamford under Ælfred and Eadweard, but we feel confident that under Æthelstan this borough would, in common with other boroughs, have the privilege of a mint. To it we assign certain coins of his reign bearing the inscription WIHTEMVND MOST, which have hitherto been ascribed to Stafford. The pennies of Eadmund, Eadred and Eadwig present the usual difficulty occasioned by the nearly general practice of omitting the names of their minting-places. Of Eadgar and all his successors to Harold II., inclusive, we have coins bearing the name of this borough preserved to us in plenty to this day.

In Domesday the account of Stanford Burgi Regis is placed between those of the city of Lincoln and the borough of Torksey, at the head of the survey of Lincolnshire. From it we learn, amongst other particulars, that there were here in the time of King Edward and at the date of the survey six wards, five in Lincolnshire and the sixth in Northamptonshire, which is beyond the bridge, and yet it used to render all customs with the others except rent and toll, which the Abbot of Burgh (Peterborough) had. It is interesting to note that the stone-ford had at the date of Domesday been replaced by a bridge. We then have mention of five houses that had been laid waste since the time of the Confessor for the work of the castle within the five wards, or Lincolnshire portion, of the borough. We may perhaps safely infer that this castle was erected during the Conqueror’s expedition to the North in A.D. 1067, to which reference has been made in our account of Lincoln. In the time of King Edward Stamford used to render a firma of £15, but at the date of Domesday this had been raised to £50. In addition there was a payment at the latter date of £28 on account of “all the King’s custom.” Various payments appear to have been comprised in the term “custom” or “customs.” At Worcester (D.B., vol. i, folio 172 a. 1) the payment that King Edward had from the moneyers is termed a “custom” that he had in that city. It would seem, therefore, that at the time of Domesday the mint at Stamford, although originally a royal mint, had passed into the hands of the burgesses, and that the King’s rights therein were paid for either in the increased rent of £50 or in the commuted payment of £28 referred to above.

The coinage at Stamford would appear to have been of a continuous character.

Type VII of William I. and type 4 (3) of William II. are the only absentee amongst the thirteen types of the two kings, and these seeming gaps will doubtless be one day repaired.

Middlesex:—D.B. Midelsexe.

London:—D.B. Lundonia.

London, the capital of the British Empire, has so ancient a history that the origin of its name is lost in the mists of antiquity. It was first known to the Romans as Londinium, and this is supposed to be a Latinization of a British appellation that had original reference to the dwelling of a person whose name was incorporated into that of the place. In later Roman times, when Londinium became a colonia, it received the name of Augusta, that is Colonia Augusta.

London has been a civitas, or city, time out of mind. It was a city and county of itself for a lengthy period, but at the time of the Domesday Survey, and until a few years ago, it was geographically and in common parlance regarded as being within the county of Middlesex.
We know of no ancient British coins that can be attributed to this city, but a mint certainly existed here in Roman times under Carausius and Allectus and their successors.

With those of the first-named emperor are associated coins bearing the names of Diocletian and Maximian. Upon these appear the exergual letters M.L., for Moneta Londinensis. P.L, P.LN, P.LO and P.LON. occur in like manner upon coins of many rulers from Aurelian to Constantius II. The fullest of these readings can only signify Pecunia Londinensis. It has been suggested, with good show of reason and argument in support, by Mr. F. A. Walters, that the coins of the BRITANNIA type of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius were struck in this country, and not improbably in London.\(^1\) The tentative character of his suggestion was, we are aware, chiefly in deference to the desire of the editors of the Numismatic Chronicle not to depart from the already received opinion that these pieces emanated from the mint at Rome and were all imported to this country. Certain Anglo-Saxon gold coins, trientes, found on Bagshot Heath, Crondal, Hants, now in the collection of Lord Grantley, bear the inscription LONDVNI or LONDVNIV, whilst some sceattas, of rather base silver, exhibit the name LVNDONIA. Ecgberht, as King of Mercia, A.D. 827-828, struck coins with the inscription LVNDONIA EIVIT and the same name, in monogram, occurs upon the coins of Ælfred the Great. From his reign until the present time our series of London coins may be safely regarded as complete, and it may be inferred that London was the principal mint of Offa and his Mercian successors.

Under Æthelstan eight moneyers were assigned to London, while six, the next highest number, were allotted to Winchester. The references to London in Domesday are only of an incidental character. It is not improbable that a separate London survey was compiled, but unfortunately it has not been preserved to us. We may, however, assume that the mint of London was always, as it now remains, a Royal Mint in the fullest sense of the word. From what we have said above it
